New Ways to Hexie

English Paper-less Piecing by Machine when hexagon-shaped patches are arranged in concentric rings around a centre, the resulting design is known as a Grandmother's Flower Garden. This classic arrangement is traditionally done by hand using a technique known as English paper piecing. But modern times have brought along new options and we will explore them in this workshop.

Instead of basting hexies to paper (which needs to be removed), they could be basted to fusible interfacing (which stays inside) the Apliquick way. Instead of tracing and cutting dozens of hexies out of fusible interfacing, they could be purchased pre-cut! And instead of whip-stitching the patches together by hand, they could be sewn together by machine using a small zigzag stitch.
